The Graduate Program in the Department of Kinesiology at San José State University has approximately 100 students across five concentrations: Athletic Training, Exercise Physiology, Sport Management, Sport Studies, and General Kinesiology. Several faculty members also work closely with the newly launched Institute for the Study of Sport, Society, and Social Change. Our department has a rich history of training students to be competent, socially aware professionals in their respective fields, which befits a program on a campus with a longstanding commitment to social justice in sport and larger society.
